

Population Health Symposium for Behavioral Health and Primary Care
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m., January 20, 2016
The Washington Court Hotel | Washington, DC

Population health requires action – across all sectors – to improve the health of communities. We are at a “tipping point” where research, policy, and practice must come together in a shared commitment to population health as fundamental to improving health and health care. The principles of population health resonate:

- health is more than the absence of disease;
- health outcomes are the result of the interactions of multiple determinants (health care, behaviors, genetics, the social environment, the physical environment); and
- in a resource-limited world, addressing population health is cost effective.

Join us for this one-day event to explore the components of population health and how behavioral health and primary care can work to impact the triple aim of improving care for individuals, reducing costs, and improving health.

Objectives

- Define key determinants of population health outcomes.
- Identify how population health establishes new priorities in prevention, policy, and practice.
- Compare key stakeholders, what each needs from the health system, and analyze how their complex relationships influence health outcomes.
- Describe what must occur to transition from individual treatment to collaborative care of populations.
- Examine the science of behavioral change and economics.

Instructors

- Raymond J. Fabius, MD, CPE, FACPE, Co-founder and President, HealthNEXT
- Ron Manderscheid, PhD, Executive Director, National Association of County Behavioral Health & Developmental Disability Directors

Registration

- $175/person; lunch included
- Register at www.amhca.org or using the attached form.
